

THE BIEL I USED TO KNOW

By Luke El Dib
March – May 2021

The earliest memory of mine is when my father first took me to Biel. Prior to, I had never had the opportunity to explore anything closer to the city than Baabda. After all these years, I wanted to revisit the sites I remembered for way back when for the sake of nostalgia. The photos I've captured are of sights unchanged after all these years.

The Emblem of Biel's seaside

The Fishermen and Boats.

- If there's any one thing that is consistent throughout the years, it's fishermen at the seaside. The sight of the boats and the many shirtless men holding their fishing rods is one that stuck with me.

Two fishermen out with their lines in the water.

Two exhausted fishermen.

A man lighting his cigarette.

A lonely fishermen who spent 2 hours without a nibble.

A cargo ship on its way to Beirut

A small speedboat.

A drifting Fisher boat.

Biel Itself.

The ocean wall underneath the walkway.

Under the walkway.

An unused security booth.

A person in a hoodie looking at the passing boats.

Oddly shaped cinderblocks from the outside.

Oddly shaped cinderblocks from the inside.

The view from within.

Road Near Biel.

A Gym near the road.
